Jakarta, April 2002

This database is an integral part of the UNSFIR working paper 02/01, entitled “Anatomy of social violence in the context of transitions: the case of Indonesia, 1990-2001” by Mohammad Zulfan Tadjoeddin. This data compilation is strictly personal, and must not be attributed to UNSFIR or any UN agency. This is an early attempt to put together data on a variety of social violence in Indonesia. Therefore we would be happy to receive input, comments and suggestions from interested people.

Technical Notes

Data sources. The national news agency, Antara, and the national daily, Kompas, are the two main data sources used in this database, while other sources were also checked.<sup>1</sup> The two main sources are read interpretatively, not literally. An incident of social violence is recorded if reported as having at least one victim, be it human (casualties or injuries) or material (such as houses, buildings, or vehicles damaged or burned). Sometimes, clear information is not found about the real issue underlying a certain incidence of social violence. If this is the case, other news sources are checked to obtain a minimum understanding of an issue or problem underlying the incidence so that each incidence can be put more accurately into a certain category.

Data coverage. This database records all incidents of social violence that took place in Indonesia between 1990 and 2001, over 26 provinces.<sup>2</sup> Violence in Aceh during the DOM (military operation zone) era (1989-1998) and violence in East Timor are not recorded here. However, they are discussed in the UNSFIR working paper, entitled “Anatomy of social violence in the context of transitions: the case of Indonesia, 1990-2001.”

Severity indicators. Apart from listing of incidents, this database also records severity indicators of each incident of social violence. The severity indicators are divided into two columns, namely number of deaths and other damages. Other damages consist of injured people, and material damages (namely number of houses, other buildings and vehicles which are destroyed/damaged/burned). Other buildings can be schools, government offices, shops, mosques, churches, etc., while vehicles consist of cars, trucks, buses, motorcycles, aircrafts, and boats.

Categories of social violence.<sup>3</sup> Each incident of social violence is placed under a relevant category. We have chosen four categories based on the group types involved in each act of social violence as follows:

<sup>2</sup> The number of provinces (26) refers to the condition before East Timor got its independence in 1999. Now Indonesia effectively has 30 provinces, and number of districts and municipalities also increased.

<sup>3</sup> Previous study by Djajadi (1999) differentiates the orientation of collective violence or social conflicts into 5 types: community vs. community, community against state, state against community, state vs. state, and a mixture. It also classified collective conflicts into 9 types: riots, destruction, clashes, military acts, ethnic clashes, killing, looting, coupe, and sabotage. But the problem is that often an incidence contains two or more types of collective violence that are inseparable. So, the categorization in this study is meant to solve such difficulty and make it simpler.

1. Communal violence: social violence between two groups of community, one group being attacked by the other. Communal groups can be based on ethnicity, religion, social class, political affiliation or simple village differences and so on. Communal violence has great variety, therefore it can be differentiated into several sub-categories, as follows;
  - a. Ethnic, religion and migration related violence. This sub-category of communal violence is related to ethnic, religion and migration issues. Migration creates the natives and migrants dichotomy. Violence in Maluku, Poso and Sambas are some examples.
  - b. The May 1998 riots. This sub-category of communal violence refers to the riots in Jakarta and several other big cities like Medan, Padang, Palembang, Solo and Yogyakarta, preceding the fall of President Suharto in May 1998.
  - c. Food riots. This sub-category of communal violence refers to a series of mass riots and lootings for basic foods mainly happened from January to March 1998 when the economic crisis reached its climax accompanied by the sharp fall of Rupiah.
  - d. Differences in political views. These differences are often manifested in the form of communal violence. This sub-category includes conflicts within and between political parties, which are then followed by clashes between their supporters. Generally, this kind of violence occurs during elections at different levels.
  - e. Competing for resources. This sub-category of communal violence is caused by disputes between community groups when they compete for economic resources, but not accompanied by clashes between ethnic, religious, and/or native-migrant groups.
  - f. The issue of dukun santet (a person believed to be able to harm or kill others through evil magic or witchcraft). This sub-category refers more to the symptoms on the surface, that is, the murder cases of persons (suspected to be dukun santet) by a group of people. However, if it is studied more deeply, there is a possibility that the issue of dukun santet was used as a pretext or justification for the killing while the fundamental problem is actually another factor.<sup>4</sup> These cases were found only in Java.

- g. Civil commotion (Clashes between villages, neighborhoods, or groups). This sub-category is rather a vague grouping, but it is true that various cases of mass clashes were found, which are often historically and culturally bound between two groups. There were a large number of cases, which generally concentrated in certain areas, for example villager clashes in Indramayu and Cirebon.
2. Separatist violence: social violence between the state and the people of certain area, which is rooted in regional separatism, i.e. a movement motivated by the desire of people in certain areas to separate from Indonesia as a country. This social violence refers to the current conflicts in Aceh and Papua.
3. State-community violence: violence between the state and the community who are expressing protests and dissatisfaction against state institutions without any separatist motives. Some examples are The Nipah incident in Sampang, Madura in 1993, and the Trisakti incident in 1998.
4. Industrial relations violence: violence that arises from the problems of industrial relations. These can be external or internal relations. 'External' refers to the conflict between the community and the company while 'internal' refers to the conflict between the workers and the company (labor disputes). Conflict between PT. Inti Indorayon Utama and community in North Tapanuli regarding environmental issue is an example of the external industrial relations conflict, while the violent labor strike in Sumedang in 1997 is an example of the internal industrial relations conflict.

<sup>4</sup> At least there are three speculations about the underlying reasons for the killings under the pretext of dukun santet: one is a revenge over the mass killing of followers of Indonesian Communist Party in the mid 1960s, second is land dispute, and third –highly speculative– attempts made by certain political forces to disrupt East Java approaching the general election in 1999. But there has not been any comprehensive study to uncover the real cause of killings involving the issue of dukun santet. (See the investigative report of Tempo, January 8-14, 2002).
